Customers may also build their own package from the itemized goods and services, however any custom packages will need to include our non-declinable Basic Services Fee, which is the first item listed in the Itemized Goods & Services section on page 7.

"PMA Pricing" is the price offered to members of People's Memorial Association (PMA). "Standard Pricing" is offered to those who do not wish to enroll in a PMA Membership.

A membership to the non-profit People's Memorial Association is a one-time fee of $99 per person and helps support their education and advocacy work for funeral consumers in Washington State. Members of PMA receive a 15% discount off of the cost of funeral goods and services.

Cremation & Aquamation

Cremation is a method of disposition by which flame reduces our body down to its most basic elements. All that remains at the end are bone fragments that are then reduced down into ashes. This is the most common form of final disposition chosen by Washingtonians.

Our direct cremation packages include an alternative container in place of a casket. Alternative containers encase the body before cremation and can be made of materials like fiberboard or composite materials. The alternative containers we provide have a shallow fiberboard bottom and deeper cardboard top.

Our direct cremation packages also include a simple, black plastic urn to hold the cremated remains after cremation takes place. This gives you the opportunity to take your time to find something really special, or to opt out of choosing something else altogether. Many people who choose to scatter ashes will do the latter.

Aquamation, otherwise known as alkaline hydrolysis, is a more environmentally-friendly alternative to flame-based cremation. This process uses water and a small amount of alkaline chemicals to break down our body's organic matter. The bones that remain at the end are processed into a fine powder, much like cremated remains.

The following plans are available. Should you wish to have additional services, please see page 7.

Terramation

Terramation, otherwise known as natural organic reduction, is a relatively new process for final disposition. The process gently transforms human remains into life-giving soil. A body is laid in with a mixture of alfalfa, straw, and sawdust, and just like any other compost is given plenty of air flow to allow the organic matter to naturally break down over the course of 30 - 90 days. At the end of the process, the next-of-kin is presented with nutrient rich bags of soil. You may choose any amount of soil you would like. Should you choose not to receive the entire amount of composted remains, you can donate the soil to be scattered on a piece of land in need of revitalization. This land is maintained by our partners at Return Home in Auburn, WA.

The following plans are available. Should you wish to have additional services, please see page 7.

Burial Plans

One of the oldest forms of final disposition, burial can have a wide variety of options and service types, including but not limited to embalming, green burial, shrouding or casketing. At the Co-op Funeral Home we are proud to be able to meet the needs of our customers' spiritual, ceremonial, and ethical values when it comes to the burial of their next-of-kin.

To learn more about how each burial plan can be adapted for green burial, see page 14. If your loved one was a veteran, our funeral directors are happy to help coordinate an array of veteran benefits from burial at a national cemetery to military honors for a graveside or memorial service.
